PASSIONTIDE

Today, which is the Fifth Sunday in Lent, is commonly called Passion Sunday, and the two-week period from now until the end of Lent is called Passiontide. "Passion" means "suffering" and refers to the spiritual and physical sufferings which Christ experienced. It is customary in many churches to follow customs which set "Passiontide" apart from the rest of the season of Lent. Here at St. Peter's Cathedral, we follow the old English custom of using the liturgical colour of red during Passiontide. The red is symbolic of our Lord's blood, which was shed for us on the Cross. Also, we follow the ancient custom of veiling the Altar Cross and other crosses in the church. This draws our attention away from the empty cross of Resurrection to the harsh reality of the rough wooden Cross on which our Saviour was crucified.
